MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OF EARLY DAYS

From the first organization of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, music has played an important part. Through the period of bitter persecution, as in the days of joys and hope, they sang their songs of praise to the accompaniment of the organ, violin, orchestra or band. Music had a prominent place in the breaking of the wilderness. William Clayton, in his journal, tells of the Nauvoo Brass Band playing numerous concerts throughout the various settlements of the middle west to earn funds to help the great migration west. He also speaks of the part music played in the lives of the tired pioneer, when at the end of the day's journey the musician would strike up a tune and the group would join in dance and song.

Because of their love of good music the pioneers built, purchased and played the best band instruments of the time. They were encouraged by their leaders to organize orchestras, bands and musical societies. President Young's attitude toward the development of this art is shown when he said to George Careless: "Brother George, I have a mission for you. I want you to be the chief musician of the Church. I want you to take the tabernacle choir and the theater orchestra and lay a foundation for good music." The bands and orchestras of the West have added greatly to the art and culture which the great leader and colonizer desired.

A wonderful collection of musical instruments has been preserved and assembled for display.
